1. The following section is hereby inserted in the Public Service Act, 1994, after section 3A:

“Handling of appointment and other career incidents of heads of department

Short title and commencement

2. This Act is called the Public Service Amendment Act, 1999, and comes into operation on a date fixed by the President by proclamation in the Gazette.

MEMORANDUM ON THE OBJECTS OF THE PUBLIC SERVICE AMENDMENT BILL, 1999

1. According to the Public Service Act, 1994 (promulgated by Proclamation No.103 of 1994), a head of department is appointed by the relevant executing authority (Minister, Member of the Executive Council, etc.) who is also responsible for dealing with other career incidents. In practice this creates problems, especially if the person holding the office of executing authority vacates that office during the term of office of the relevant head of department (normally a 5 year term of office applies to the latter). In many cases the terms of office of heads of department and the relevant political office-bearers also differ. The present employment practice is also not conducive to the redeployment and utilisation of heads of department throughout the public service. Consequently, it is being proposed that—

- * heads of national departments and organisational components be appointed by the President (including dealing with such persons' other career incidents, such as transfer and discharge); and
- * heads of provincial administration, departments and offices be appointed by the relevant Premiers (including dealing with such persons, other career incidents, such as transfer and discharge).

2. The above-mentioned proposal will in practice mean that the President will exercise his or her power of employment together with the other members of Cabinet (section 84(2)(e) of the Constitution, read with section 85(2)(e) of the Constitution). In the provincial sphere of government it will also mean that the relevant Premier will exercise his or her power of employment together with the other members of the Executive Council (section 127(1) of the Constitution, read with section 125(2) of the Constitution). This will promote inclusiveness, co-ordination, better utilisation of scarce human resources and better management of possible conflict situations between heads of departments and political office-bearers.

3. The national departments, provincial administrations and employee organisations were consulted on the Bill.

4. In the opinion of the Department and the State Law Adviser, the Bill must be dealt with in accordance with the procedure prescribed by section 76 of the Constitution.
